

LOST AT SEA

The strange route of the Lena Shoal junk

| | | |
|--------------------|--|----|
| Chapter I | The wreck on the Lena Shoal | 1 |
| | Franck Goddio, Director of the European Institute of Underwater Archaeology | |
| | 1 The development of Chinese maritime commerce | 1 |
| | 2 Navigation to the Phillipines in the fifteenth century | 4 |
| | 3 Discovery of the site | 12 |
| | 4 The archaeological excavation | 14 |
| | 5 Vestiges of the hull | 22 |
| | 6 Packaging and distribution of the artefacts | 28 |
| Chapter II | Maritime trade in China during the middle Ming period | 43 |
| | Peter Lam, Director of the Art Museum, The Chinese University of Hong Kong | |
| | 1 Foreign trade policy of the Ming dynasty | 43 |
| | 2 The tributary trade system | 46 |
| | 3 Private trade and smuggling | 50 |
| | 4 China and the Philippines | 51 |
| Chapter III | Industrial ceramics in China | 59 |
| | ceramic production at Jingdezhen from the 10th to the 16th century | |
| | Stacey Pierson, Curator of the Percival David Foundation of Chinese Art | |
| | 1 The industrial complex | 59 |
| | 2 The ceramics | 62 |
| Chapter IV | Traditions and transitions | 71 |
| | Chinese ceramics at the end of the 15th century | |
| | Monique Crick, Consultant on Chinese Art and Far Eastern Ceramics | |
| | 1 Blue and white porcelains, qinghua | 72 |
| | 2 Monochrome porcelains | 86 |
| | 3 Fahua porcelains | 86 |
| | 4 Celadon-glazed stoneware | 86 |
| | 5 Conclusion | 89 |
| Chapter V | Connoisseurship and commerce | 91 |
| | Rosemary Scott, Senior Academic Consultant, Asian Art Departments, Christie's | |